Acknowledgement of Country

We acknowledge the Traditional Owners of the lands, seas, skies and waterways from across Queensland. We pay our respect to the Elders, past, present and emerging, for they hold the memories, traditions, the culture and hopes of Aboriginal peoples and Torres Strait Islander peoples.

Foreword

A message from the Minister

The Queensland Early Childhood Workforce Strategy 2025-28 (the strategy) has been developed to ensure that all Queensland children – regardless of their location or life circumstances – have access to high-quality early childhood education and care.

The first few years of a child's life are critical for growth and development. The quality of early education received during this time plays a significant role in shaping their future.

Every interaction matters. We know educators have a considerable influence on children's development and wellbeing and support successful transitions from home to early years and into school.

Each day, educators across our vast and diverse state open doors to more than 300,000 children. We recognise the warm welcome educators, teachers and staff provide fills a family with confidence, knowing their child is safe, happy and nurtured.

A skilled, supported and engaged workforce has a profound impact on setting critical foundations for learning and wellbeing of Queensland's youngest minds, while also enabling families to participate in the workforce and contribute to the economic growth of the state.

This strategy outlines actions to attract, retain and elevate early childhood professionals across the state. It recognises the need to build a pipeline of qualified educators through stronger career pathways, practical training opportunities, and strategies to support workforce development.

Our goal, for you, the early childhood educator, is to ensure you feel valued, recognised and empowered. We also want to inspire school leavers, welcome back experienced educators and invite career changers to join our incredible early childhood family.

By working together, we can continue to build a capable and sustainable early childhood workforce that gives all children a strong start.

The Honourable John-Paul Langbroek MP
Minister for Education and the Arts

‘What I love most about my job is that I get to help children understand that they belong to this world and create memorable moments with them.’

Overview

Our vision is one of a sustainable, qualified early childhood workforce who are recognised for their contribution to improving outcomes for children.

This strategy focuses on growing and retaining a high-quality workforce, strengthening support systems, and modernising workforce approaches. It is guided by robust data and ongoing consultation to ensure educators’ voices are heard.

Professional development and locally tailored solutions are central, ensuring communities’ evolving needs are met.

Educators are at the heart of this strategy—whether you’re casual, part-time, or full-time; working in centre-based care, family day care, or outside school hours care, this strategy is for you.

With strong commitments from both the Australian and Queensland governments, there has never been a better time to join the early childhood sector.

The strategy aims to attract new educators, build clear career pathways, strengthen support, and improve access to professional learning—aligning with national efforts to build a respected, high-quality workforce.

Our Initiatives

Performance measures

Queensland Early Years Institute

The Queensland Early Years Institute (the Institute) is a key initiative of the strategy and the first of its kind in Australia. The early childhood education and care workforce experiences unique challenges. The department has commenced broad consultation with the sector on the design and focus of the Institute, which will aim to support educators across the state, no matter where they live, or their background.

The Institute will play an important role in facilitating a voice for the early childhood education and care workforce, work to improve workforce capability, and enhance sector-wide workforce planning and strategies.

The Institute will have three main functions:

New programs

Investing in programs that support inclusion and positive behaviour practices

The department is introducing additional support programs that foster inclusion and positive relationships to support the wellbeing of children and their families, teachers and educators.

These programs are designed to enhance the skills and capabilities of early childhood teachers and educators, providing necessary resources and practice supports, to engage children in learning, and to develop their self-expression, and self-reliance skills, while respecting their dignity and rights.

Additionally, the programs support services to meet their obligations under the National Principles for Child Safe Organisations by promoting positive communication, considerations towards family and cultural values, and fostering respectful relationships among children, families, educators, staff, and volunteers.

The leadership and management program

Leadership in the early childhood sector is integral to the growth, development, and wellbeing of educators and children alike. Effective leadership can positively impact educators' professional satisfaction, personal growth, wellbeing and mental health, and overall workplace morale.

The leadership and management program aims to empower educators with the skills and knowledge needed, to lead with confidence, and drive positive transformation within the sector, benefiting both educators and the children they serve.

Qualifications Pathways Program in action

Anna's journey

From local government to an early childhood teacher

The Qualifications Pathways Program (QPP) is transforming the early childhood education and care (ECEC) workforce across the state, especially in rural and remote communities.

This game-changing initiative helps individuals access rewarding careers in early learning, creating lasting impacts on both families and local economies.

Choosing a career in early childhood education

Anna's inspiring journey is one such success story. Pivoting from a career in local government, she decided to change her bachelor degree from policy and procedure to pursue her passion for working with children in the early childhood sector.

In the small town of Surat, Anna faced challenges finding career development opportunities, but thanks to the QPP, was able to take the first step towards becoming an early childhood teacher (ECT) without leaving her community.

The program provided Anna with:

- financial support and incentives to study while working in ECEC
- access to training and professional development
- guidance and mentorship from ECEC leaders
- a direct pathway to an ECT qualification, addressing educator shortages in rural areas.

A brighter future

Anna's personal success story extends beyond her own career growth—it's about strengthening her community. With a dedicated ECT in town, young children now have access to Free Kindy, setting them up for a lifelong love of learning.

Families benefit too as quality early education allows working parents to stay in the community and contribute to its growth.

Local impacts

This program has created a ripple effect in Surat:

- A thriving local economy with young families sustaining the town.
- A stronger, more skilled ECEC workforce for the long term.
- Improved access to quality early education for children, no matter their postcode.

Anna's journey is a shining example of how workforce initiatives can transform rural communities.

Her determination shows that with the right support, anyone can make a meaningful career change and contribute to building a brighter future for early childhood education.

Looking ahead

As more passionate people like Anna step up, the Qualifications Pathways Program will continue to ensure every community has access to skilled educators shaping the next generation.
